interested in software engineering and I have as a top company LinkedIn. I am currently a sophomore at Stanford, majoring in Symbolic Systems. I noticed that you work at LinkedIn for many years on software engineering there. We both have available time slots at 5:30 on thursdays. Do you think we could meet?

I hope you find the support you need.
Unfortunately, I do not think there are any job openings in my line of work. Best of luck!

Hey there! I'm Yuri, a CS student at Columbia, and I am interested in software engineering and have LinkedIn as a Top Company. We both have matching available times on Thursdays at 5:30. Would you be up to chat more about your role?

Timothy Hodges • 7:05 PM

Ok, no problem.

Why we have points

Want to snag a free week of LinkedIn Premium and keep the good times rolling?

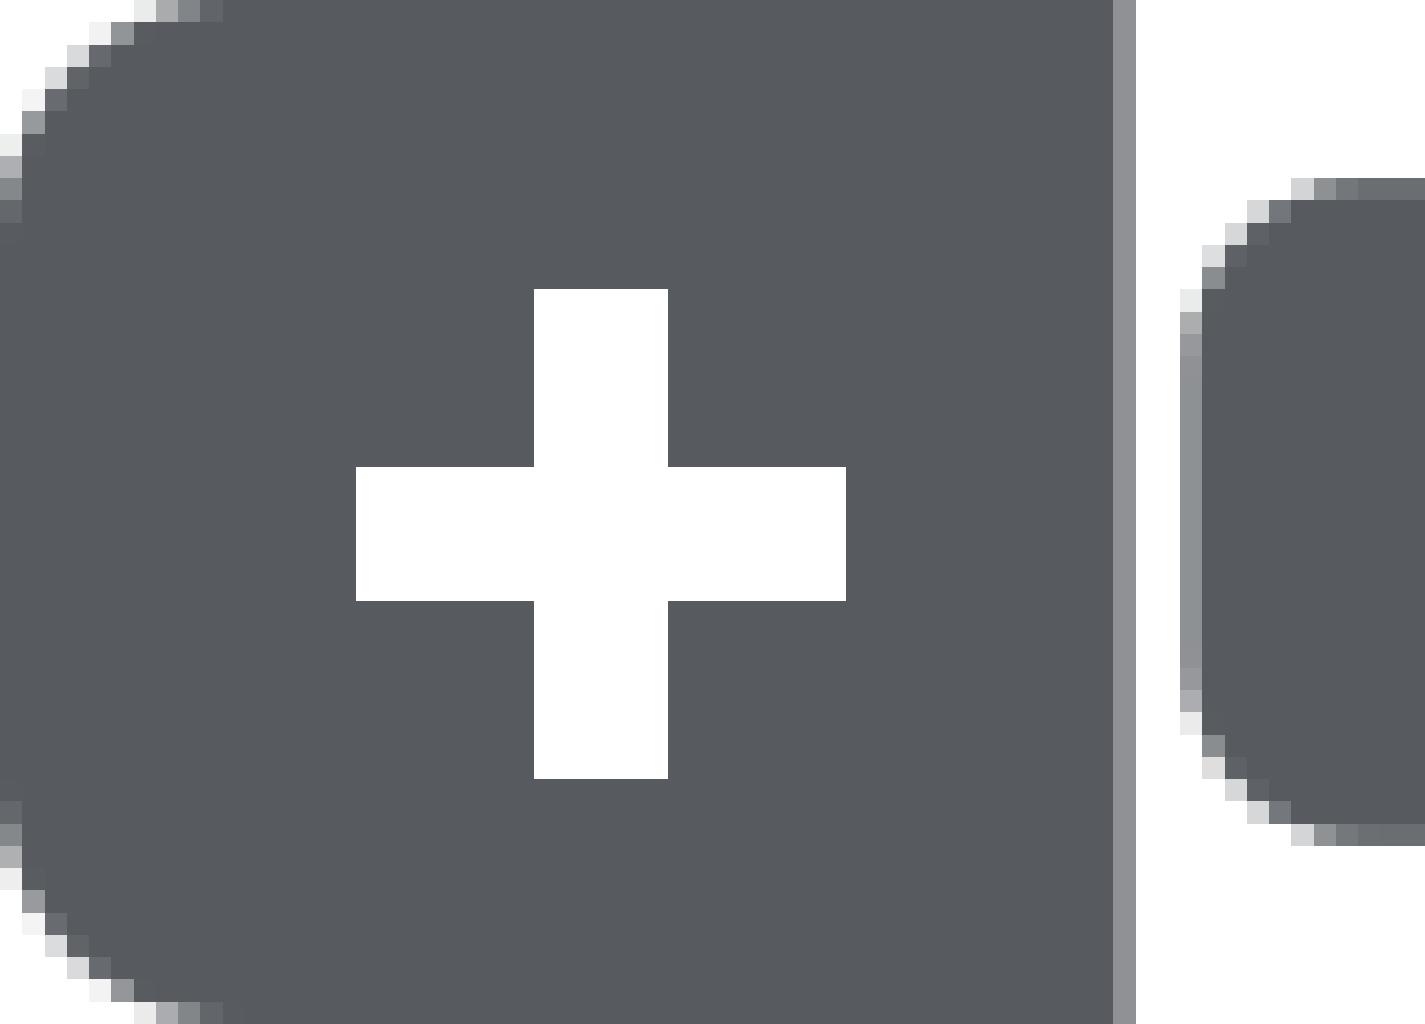

It's all about consistent and authentic engagement. Start by regularly posting valuable content that resonates with your professional network. Don't just scroll by; comment thoughtfully on others' posts, offering insights or asking relevant questions. Actively connect with people who can genuinely add to your professional sphere.

The more you interact and contribute, the more visible and valuable you become on the platform. This consistent activity often catches LinkedIn's eye, leading to promotional offers like that coveted free week of Premium.

To maintain this streak, simply keep up your genuine engagement. Continue to share, comment, and connect, making LinkedIn a regular part of your professional routine. Building a strong, active presence is key to both short-term perks and long-term career growth.
